

Communication

October 3, 2013

Introducing: Shauna Froelich

The Communication Department is pleased to introduce Shauna Froelich. This is Shauna's second semester teaching Communication Law at UW-Green Bay. I sat down with Shauna to learn more about her background and career.

What was your career background before coming to UWGB? I clerked at several law firms, both business and personal injury, during Marquette Law School. After graduating, I served in the United States Air Force as a Judge Advocate General for the 67th Information Operations Wing in San Antonio, TX.

Given your law background, what inspired you to start teaching? My passion for teaching comes from my desire to teach others to engage the world and love learning.

What is your teaching philosophy? My teaching philosophy is strongly influenced by the Socratic Method. I was instructed in this method during my years at Marquette Law School. Under the Socratic Method, I provoke critical thinking in my students through questions, examination and debate. I see education as a creative process, stimulating critical thinking and active engagement in the world.

What are your expectations for your students? I expect students to pursue excellence in their coursework. I also expect them to use their knowledge to critically reflect on their beliefs in the world.

Do you have any advice for your students? My advice to students is to enjoy college. Be thankful for this opportunity, study, and work hard.

What are your hobbies? With four children, a dog, and a husband who is an attorney, there is rarely a dull moment in my life. However, in my free time, I love water skiing, painting, the beach and outdoor adventures.

Interview conducted by Communication Department PR Representative Rachel Veldt